Welcome to ALL

UCD Widening
Participation Committee
Annual Report 2017/18

Introduction

Chair's Foreword

Dear colleagues and friends,

I am delighted to present the report of the UCD Widening Participation Committee (WPC) for 2017/18. Our university community strives to provide a supportive and inclusive environment for all its students, while valuing the welcome diversity that comes from recognising and removing the historical barriers that have previously prevented the full participation in higher education of some individuals and groups in our society.

This brief report provides just a flavour of the work done by the Committee in conjunction with the excellent team in UCD Access and Lifelong Learning, and with the Equality, Diversity and Inclusion subgroup of the University Management Team, to whom it reports.

A key aspect of the work of the WPC is to ensure that the entire UCD community works to level the playing field – Cothrom na Féinne – ensuring not only equity of access to undergraduate education, but also equity in terms of supports through and beyond higher education - for example in opportunities to undertake co-curricular activities, Erasmus exchanges, internships, and opportunities for graduate study.

The Committee is very grateful to Professor Mark Rogers, Registrar and Deputy President, Professor Colin Scott, Vice-President for Equality, Diversity and Inclusion, and to Dr Anna Kelly, Director of UCD Access and Lifelong Learning, for their support and encouragement for Widening Participation during the year. Particular thanks also to Michelle Tracey, of UCD ALL, for her excellent and diligent administrative support to the WPC.

Professor Grace Mulcahy
Chair, UCD Widening Participation Committee

Over the past year I have been honoured to work with the UCD Widening Participation Committee, led by Professor Grace Mulcahy, and the UCD Access & Lifelong Learning team, who together are realising our vision for diversity and inclusion – a University for All - where every student feels welcome, that they belong, and are valued.

UCD is pioneering the development and implementation of 'University for All' - a whole-institution approach to mainstreaming inclusion that is designed to recognise and value diversity, based on the belief that mainstreaming inclusion is the job of the entire university community and is the responsibility of all. 'University for All' is a systemic response that weaves access into the fabric of the institution at every level, recognising that it is everyone's business.

This approach extends access beyond entry, to include an inclusive learning environment, designed around the needs of all students, rather than a perceived notion of a typical or so-called 'traditional' student. All facets of university life, including programmes, teaching and learning, student support, and the built and technological infrastructure form part of this initiative.

Over the past year, in excess of twenty meetings have been held with academic programme boards and policy/support units, in order to further develop the understanding of access, widening participation and mainstreaming, as envisaged by UCD. These meetings have been critical to expanding the awareness of the University for All initiative and are a key part of the top-down bottom-up hybrid approach to implementation.

Opportunities to share information, tease out the challenges, and identify potential solutions, are necessary and welcome. In a university setting, the importance of data and evidence cannot be underestimated, and the ready availability of institutional and programme level data offered a context for these discussions and helped build momentum. Moving access from the margins to the mainstream is but one issue, one challenge, one priority in the landscape. Finding opportunities to align this work with key institutional priorities, such as research, teaching, and engagement is one of the keys to accelerating progress.

Throughout UCD there is a growing confidence, underpinned by evidence, that significant progress has been made in becoming a diverse and inclusive scholarly community. The challenge is to capitalise on these achievements, and to continue to create an eco-system that enables and supports even greater progress.

Dr Anna M. Kelly
Director, UCD Access & Lifelong Learning

The Role of the Widening Participation Committee

The Widening Participation Committee serves as a link between UCD's Access and Lifelong Learning Unit (UCD ALL) and the wider University Community. Its role is to oversee and monitor progress, in line with University Strategy, towards diversifying UCD's student profile to reflect that of the general population. Sponsored by the Registrar and Deputy President, Professor Mark Rogers, the Committee reports to the Equality, Diversity and Inclusion sub-group of the University Management Team.

The Committee includes representatives of each of the University's Programme Boards, as well as Policy and Support Units and Student Access leaders. The Committee Secretariat is provided by UCD ALL.

Committee Activities and Actions

The WP Committee held four plenary meetings during the 2017/2018 academic year, in September, November, January and May (the March meeting was cancelled due to circumstances beyond our control).

The Registrar and Deputy President, Professor Mark Rogers, attended the September meeting and noted the positive effect of ALL at the heart of the Belfield campus, as well as the work of the WP Committee in highlighting the achievements of this unit. He also commented on the value of mainstreaming Access, the value of mainstreaming access, the importance of data as a tool in mainstreaming, and the value of embedding Widening Participation within the university's broader agenda and strategy.

Key actions from the WP Committee, in conjunction with UCD ALL during 2017/2018 included:

- Re-establishment of a data group and the development of a Dashboard, allowing individual Programme Boards to monitor their progress in meeting targets for Widening Participation
- The establishment of Cothrom na Féinne scholarships
- UCD's Leadership and Success in securing additional funding from the Department of Education and Science through its Programme for Access to Higher Education (PATH) programmes
- Roll-out of the University for All, Outreach Network, and Age-Friendly University projects
- Hosting events including the University for All Launch, and Access Symposium "From the Bench to Centre-Field"
- With colleagues from the EDI group and others, advocating for UCD to join the University of Sanctuary movement
- Re-invigorating internal and external communications strategies for Widening Participation

These are presented in more detail below.

29,7% of the undergraduate student population of over 17,000 are drawn from targeted under-represented groups

Baseline Data

The total numbers of undergraduate students from under-represented cohorts, together with the numbers from each separate cohort, from 2014/15 to 2017/18 are shown in Table 1. The overall proportion of widening participation students has increased in each of the four years shown, and in 2017/18 stands at 29.7%. The numbers of mature students at UCD have decreased slightly, with indications that this reflects improved employment opportunities with economic recovery.

Table 2 shows trends in under-represented new entrant cohorts from 2009/10 to 2016/17, and again the trend is for increasing numbers through all routes except for mature entrants.

In addition to improving the metrics at entry, it is equally important that UCD supports the progression and completion of under-represented student cohorts. Figure 1 illustrates the First Year Progression Rates of under-represented new entrants to undergraduate programmes as compared with that for the entire undergraduate new entrant population. Since 2009/10, the former has been in excess of 80%, and not markedly different from that of the overall new-entrant cohort. The trend is also generally for an increase in the first year progression rate, with the exception of 2011/12 and 2015/2016.

from the first to the second year of their studies from 2009/10 to 2016/17.

Finally, a comparison of completion rates for under-represented student cohorts as compared with the general undergraduate population shows that since 2008/9 the proportion of students not completing their programme has remained steady, with the non-completion rate for widening participation students within 5% of that of the rate recorded for all undergraduates.

FIGURE 2. NON-COMPLETION RATES for the overall undergraduate population, and undergraduates from under-represented cohorts, from 2005/6 to 2012/13.

The availability of this data, and of other metrics, is invaluable in assessing the work done in UCD in supporting Access and Widening Participation. Particular thanks are due to Dr Bairbre Fleming and Dr Lisa Padden, who prepared these data reports, and to Maura McGinn, Director of Institutional Research, Jill O’Mahony, Director of Admissions and Enrolment Planning, and Susan Mulkeen, Deputy Director of Admissions, for supplying the data.

A further initiative this year from Access and Lifelong Learning has provided for data on access students to be provided to individual programme areas, through their Widening Participation Committee representatives, thus allowing each area to conduct a comparison with the overall University performance, and the relevant targets for access and completion.

The UCD Accessible Signage strategy provides a consistent building-wide strategy for accessibility signs and wayfinding. The highlight of the year is that staff and students can now see the strategy in reality with the roll out of the accessible signs in buildings across campus including the Newman, James Joyce Library and the Veterinary Sciences Centre. This phase of the project should be completed early in 2019.

Academic Programmes, Entry Routes and Scholarships

There are significant barriers to those aspiring to higher education whose personal circumstances mean that they are unable or unwilling to study on a full-time basis. UCD has pioneered an innovative and unique approach to part-time study, through its innovative Open Learning initiative. Open Learning is now an entry route to the university. For those who want to progress from simply taking individual modules, there are now Open Learning pathways to a growing number of degrees including Arts, Social Sciences and Science. There is university-wide approval in place for any programme to adopt Open Learning as a pathway, thus paving the way for further development of this initiative.

Open Learning can also be used by mature applicants if they are applying for a degree programme and have successfully completed one or more Open Learning Modules (minimum GPA 2.0). This may be considered as proof of academic ability as an alternative to an MSAP score.

Scholarships available specifically for students from under-represented cohorts (Widening Participation Scholarships) were, for the first time during this Academic year, termed Cothrom na Féinne Scholarships, and presented to recipients (with their Secondary School Principals as guests) at the University Awards Ceremonies. This initiative serves to highlight UCD's strategic commitment to equality, diversity and inclusion, as well as furthering the objective of mainstreaming the work of the WPC and UCD ALL. One hundred scholarships were awarded to undergraduate students for 2018/2019. Thanks are due to the Donors and to UCD Foundation, without whom these scholarships would not be available. A number of scholarships (fee waivers funded through Schools within the College) were also provided to access students who accepted a place on a graduate taught programme within the College of Social Sciences and Law.

Outreach and Engagement

The UCD Outreach Co-ordinating network had its inaugural meeting in April. 20 colleagues from across campus participated in a fruitful workshop to initiate mapping UCD's outreach engagement with underrepresented communities.

With the recruitment of additional resources for outreach, ALL continues to develop new community links and grow the community outreach programme for learners of all ages. A focus of this work is to develop outreach initiatives for communities that are very distant from higher education.

September 2018 saw 23 students, the biggest number ever, progress from the Future You mentoring programme to study at UCD.

Inter-Institutional Collaboration

As part of the Leinster Pillar 1 Consortium (constituting IADT, MIE, NCAD, TCD and UCD), UCD led successful proposals to the DES PATH funding calls. The PATH 1 stream aims to increase diversity of students entering the teaching profession. Under the PATH 2 stream, the consortium was awarded funding for 40 “Leaders and Learners” bursaries worth €5,000 per annum for the duration of an undergraduate programme, and targeted at under-represented cohorts including lone parents and part-time students. The initial cohort of recipients were presented with their bursaries by Minister for Higher Education Mary Mitchell O’Connor at the GPO Witness History museum, on 17th April 2018. PATH 2 funding provides for a range of initiatives on widening participation across the Leinster Pillar 1 institutions, including:

- A Creative Arts Summer School
- Cross-Institutional Open Learning Pathways
- Inter-Institutional and Cross-Community Approaches to Mentoring
- A Learning City approach to Community Engagement

The inaugural Creative Arts Summer School, designed to engage prospective students from all of the target groups, was held during the week commencing Monday 25th June. Among other activities, participants had the chance to design zero waste garments in NCAD, explore creative dance in MIE, try out the animation studio in IADT, enjoy a drama workshop in TCD, and investigate the commonalities between music and science in UCD.

Through PATH 3 funding the Open Learning pathways pioneered in UCD will now be extended to other institutions, and scholarships will be available to enhance access to these pathways. The funding also makes provision for the successful access mentoring programmes developed in individual institutions to develop synergies by bringing the mentors in the various institutions together, and harnessing their combined experience and insight in outreach to prospective students and supporting those already in higher education. In addition, each of these initiatives will be embedded, through collaboration with community partners, within intergenerational learning communities. This will help to ensure the sustainability of the developments, with the ambition of attaining the UNESCO award of Learning City for Dublin. In line with the Sustainable Development Goals, Learning Cities promote lifelong learning for all, thereby equipping citizens to adapt to change.

University of Sanctuary Status

On 6th March UCD was formally awarded University of Sanctuary status in recognition of a range of initiatives to welcome refugees and asylum seekers into the university community. These initiatives include a number of fee waivers, along with a range of student-led activities.

The University of Sanctuary Certificate was presented by Dr Veronica Crosbie of Places of Sanctuary Ireland to UCD President Professor Andrew J. Deeks at a ceremony in the UCD Sutherland School of Law. Dr Emily Logan, Chief Commissioner of the Irish Human Rights and Equality Commission, spoke at the ceremony and emphasised that right to access education is key to enable each person to flourish.

Events and Communications

Access Symposium – From the Bench to Centre-field

UCD's annual Access Symposium was held on 31st May 2018, and celebrated the 30th anniversary of the university offering its first formal supports for students with disability. The Symposium was opened by Minister for Higher Education, Mary Mitchell O'Connor, and guest speakers included Dr Vianne Timmons, President and Vice-Chancellor of the University of Regina, Saskatchewan, and UCD Alumna Dr Caroline Casey, entrepreneur and activist. Members of the ucd community highlighted their work on innovative approaches to supporting students with a disability, the student experience and innovative mainstreaming. Special presentations were made to honour the pioneers of disability supports in UCD – Professor John Kelly, Carmel Bevan, Elaine Howley, and Gerry Ellis.

University for All Launch

Minister Mary Mitchell O'Connor again attended and spoke at the launch of UCD's "University for All" on 17th November 2017. This initiative is designed to move the work of access and widening participation from the margins to the mainstream, using the principles of Universal Design.

The work of access and participation historically may have been seen as an addition to the central work of higher education; now the university has placed mainstreaming and inclusion at the core, making diversity a part of everyday life on campus. 'University for All' makes access everyone's business and ensures we are all working towards a diverse and inclusive university community.

University College Dublin
University for All

In this context, UCD's mission to provide higher education that is inclusive and celebrates diversity can be considered to incorporate three phases:

Phase 1: Building Foundations

This phase addressed the underpinning strategy and structures needed to build a foundation on which to develop a mainstream approach to inclusion, access and participation.

Phase 2: Harnessing Commitment

In this phase we harnessed the commitment and enthusiasm of individual university staff.

Phase 3: University for All

This phase will build on earlier developments by focusing on the creation of a 'ripple effect' to extend mainstreaming and inclusive practice throughout the campus.

Invitation from the WP Committee

Equality of access to UCD education programmes is core to our mission. Adoption of University for All principals, placing responsibility for widening participation in the hands of each member of our university community, sends a powerful message. The Widening Participation Committee, therefore, in conjunction with UCD Access and Lifelong Learning, invites you to consider how access and lifelong learning is supported in your Programme/College/School/Unit, and to tell us about your successes, progress, and suggestions for future activity.
